February 2007) The film presents a musical score by Aaron Zigman, who was hired after Alison Krauss supported the job. [16] Zigman said there are similarities between the music he composed for Bridge in Teramo and the film Flicka in that "... sometimes there is a little Celtic influence but not much", but he also has Continued to say that there was a more modern feeling for the music that he composed for Bridge in Teramo. [17] He did it as CSUPã³ asked him not to compose "your typical Hollywood score"; Then he mixed the orchestral melody with "a little modern flavor." [18] The score he composed for the film is described as "very big" compared to his other work, and Zigman commented that "apart from the Minimalist stuff and the coloring I love to do, I also like the large orchestral stuff, and the official soundtrack for the film was published as Music From and Inspired by Bridge to Teramo by Hollywood Records on February 13, 2007.
